It was two years ago (almost to the day) when Wednesday's Child first featured this bubbly social butterfly by the name of Brittany (born 2005). So as autumn attempts to cool our evenings and shorten our days, we decided to take a look at how Brittany has continued to grow over the last two years as we wandered amongst the pumpkins, gourds and goats at Pa's Pumpkin Patch in Long Beach, California.

Brittany has continued to develop a love for animals so feeding the goats at Pa's Pumpkin Patch was right up her alley. And as when she was younger, Brittany still loves to be helpful and helps around the house – and has even received achievement awards for helpfulness at school (as well as for perfect attendance). Brittany is an inquisitive and adventurous girl who loves to learn new things and aspires to be a teacher when she grows up.

When tasked to find "the great pumpkin", Brittany made her way around the patch ... passing by some pretty big pumpkins and some almost perfectly symmetrically-shaped pumpkins. It wasn't the biggest or best-shaped pumpkin that she ended up taking home, though – for Brittany, the great pumpkin was the one that felt "just right" to her.

Finding the "just right" fit in a family for Brittany remains our task at hand. One feature that Brittany's "just right" fitting family would have is an openness and supportive sensitivity to Brittany maintaining a relationship with an older sibling who has been a big part of Brittany's "patch" for most of Brittany's life.
