This week Wednesday's Child is taking to the ice again to offer a second spin for Samantha (2000), who has a great sense of humor and enjoys music. It was the holiday season of 2014 when we were joined by legendary Olympic pairs figure skater and silver medalist Peter Caruthers for some skating lessons for Samantha. While the skating lesson is now a memory, Samantha's need for permanency is still present.

Along with using her sense of humor, Samantha can be assertive at times and at other times she is more introspective -- especially while grieving losses in her life. Samantha can also be open in expressing her thoughts and feelings. Samantha is bilingual, has good peer relationships and interacts well with adults. Samantha could benefit from having positive role models in her life to help enhance her self-esteem.

Last season's twirl on the ice was a first go-around for Samantha and she approached the challenging adventure in a light-hearted manner. Part of that first ice-skating lesson was ensuring that the skates fit properly and were laced up for support. Similarly, we have remained steadfast in our efforts to find the adoptive family that will be a good fit for Samantha and that will give her the support to gracefully "skate on" through the slips and slides of life. To learn more about Samantha and about adoption, take another peak at Wednesday's Child and then call 866-921-ADOPT (2367).
