Earlier this year, we had the opportunity to sit down and talk with David, a friendly and articulate teen, about his interests. Born in 1995, David has developed a passion for many different sports; however, as this articulate young man explained to us the transformation of the World Wrestling Federation (WWF) into World Wrestling Entertainment and meticulously explained the difference between wrestling entertainment and the college sport of Greco-roman wrestling, it became evident that wrestling topped his list.

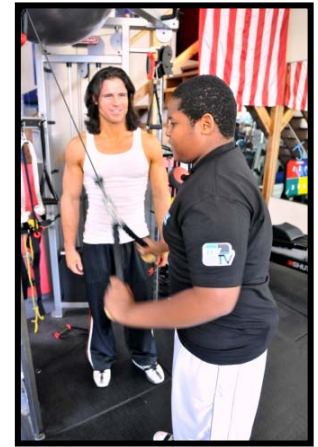

With this in mind, we arranged for David to meet one of his favorite WWE wrestling stars. And since David had never been to a training center either, we took David to The Yard Training Center and Gym in Hermosa Beach, California to meet with one of his favorites – John Morrison (aka: Johnny Nitro) of WWE. Here David got a one-on-one training lesson from Johnny Nitro as John took the time to show David some correct and effective work-out techniques.

Could David be the next WWE star? Perhaps. But David's current career goals include working with technology and computers. As a growing kid who would like a healthy outlet such as working out, though, David took to the lesson very seriously. Under the watchful eye of a pro, David learned to safely work the machines and his muscles.

In a child's life, a watchful eye on every facet of his life is essential. That watchful eye often consists of the child's family, school and community -- something most of us took for granted growing up. Sadly, for a child like David growing up in foster care, that inherent "watchful eye" is sometimes disconnected or missing.

David has VIP tickets to watch some of his favorite wrestlers at the WWE Summer Slam 09 coming to Los Angeles. Meanwhile we're looking for a family that is ready to keep a permanent "watchful eye" on David to help provide and ensure he receives the nurturing guidance it takes to safely maneuver life as well as the support to pursue his endeavors.
