Have you ever been so excited that you smiled ear to ear and that excitement rendered you speechless? It happened to this pair of brothers, but they didn't remain speechless for long though as they soon learned that when you're pro-baseball-players-in-training, you got to get used to reporters and interviews.

Luis was born at the beginning of 1996 and before that year was up, little brother Eduardo was born. Although 11 months separate these two, they are "twins-at-heart" and are the consummate Angels baseball fans. Both boys aspire to be part of the Angels baseball team -- and for at least a day, they were.

The day started with hanging out at the dugout during batting practice and then tossing the ball around with each of their favorite players before the evening's game. Luis even got a batting lesson and both boys were buried in Angel's goodies and covered in autographs.

Both boys are great athletes and share future aspirations to be professional baseball players or police officers. Both professions could afford them opportunities to be heroes, figuratively or literally. For right now, these two are being all that they can be as part of their little league team – Luis on the pitcher’s mound and little brother Eduardo playing 2nd base or short stop.

These two brothers are looking to join the line-up of a family that will nurture their interests and, of course, take them to watch their favorite teams play. Having such a family as a permanent home-base where they would always be safe would make their “field of dreams” come true.

Wednesday’s Child and the Los Angeles Angels of Anaheim have teamed up to help fulfill these brothers’ “field of dreams”. And when we show this, some prospective adoptive families will come.
