The old adage that blood is thicker than water only marginally characterizes the bond this sibling set of four boys have with one another. Santos, Francisco, Nicolas, and Xavier are brothers who have a very unique and close bond with one another. This is a fabulous set of four boys so we took them to a fabulous place – Rolling Robots in Glendale, California – where boys can build things like robots and cars.

Santos was born in 1997 and is a sharp and responsible one who looks out for his younger brothers. Building things is a snap for Santos and he needed very little direction – which, when needed, Santos is good at following. Outgoing yet easy-going best describes Santos' personality and he wants to have a family who will keep him and his brother together.

Francisco, born in 1999, is a little quieter than Santos but does know how to get what he needs and is resourceful and intelligent. Like all of his brothers, Francisco does well in school. He especially enjoys video games, cartoons, and sports such as basketball. Francisco looks to Santos for direction and support. When they were building their robotic cars, all Francisco had to do when he felt stuck was watch Santos and mimic what he was doing to get right back on track.

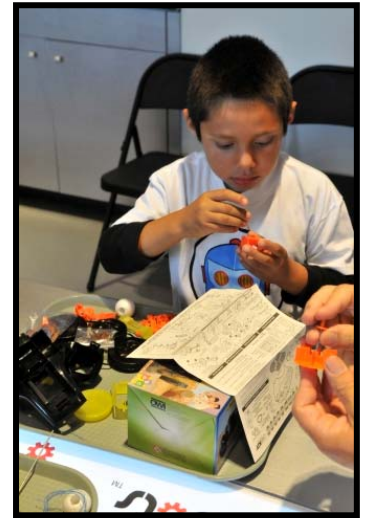

Born in 2001, Nicholas, is active, athletic, and does very well in school. Nicholas is carefree and gets excited to do just about anything, especially if it includes his brothers as well.

Xavier is the baby boy in the family. Born in 2002, he's a charmer and, as is typical of youngest children, he generally gets what he wants from his older brothers. Both Nicholas and Xavier needed a little help with piecing it all together at Rolling Robots, but in the end both beamed with smiles ear to ear while marveling at their accomplishments.

While all four children have some understanding of what adoption means, oldest brother Santos understands and is able to articulate it best. His wish for his brothers is to have a happy and safe home where they would never have to worry about growing up without each other. No child should ever have to worry about growing up separated from siblings, but the reality is that too many do just that and Santos definitely thinks about this as it relates to the welfare of his little brothers.

At the beginning of the build, there were piles of robot and car parts and it took time, patience and a love for the mechanics of it all to create the finished product. Even with the needed parts and instructions available, it takes persistence to reach the goal and the transformation from the parts into the completed whole.

To build a family you need different parts (such as family members) and some accessories (such as a place of residence) – but it's persistence that will make a family gel and grow together. We have “the additional parts” here for an instant family but we're looking for parents who will be persistent in meeting these children's needs and vigilant about raising them together. If you have the desire and ability to provide these four brothers a permanent home together, don't let time slip away, call today.
