You're never too old to visit Santa and you're never too old to want a family to call your own. Meet Urbano, a 15 year old whose wish is to become part of a permanent family. We met Urbano at the Americana on Brand in Glendale, California for some holiday cheer and gift giving.

Urbano is a name of Spanish origin that means "from the city." Born in 1993, Urbano is definitely a city kid at heart but he also loves the great outdoors. Some of the things Urbano likes to do on a regular basis are playing video games, reading and listening to music. These activities might type-cast him as an introvert, but that's far from the truth. Although Urbano enjoys his solitary moments, this 15-year-old has a lot of friends and can be the life of the party.

We found Urbano to be a well-rounded kid and very secure in who he is. Perhaps this comes from the great attitude he has which seems to radiate from him. Open-minded, nothing is too corny or too boring for Urbano to try at least once -- even meeting Santa. Perhaps this open mind comes from his love of reading. Although he loves to read, Urbano is quick to tell us that he doesn't like history but prefers math. While Urbano is easy going and a kid-at-heart, there is also a mature and thoughtful side to this young man.

As we send out holiday greetings, one message we want to send out is that all children -- even teens -- need and deserve a safe place to call home. If you have a heart for older children, please give us a call.

Happy Holidays from Urbano and the Wednesday's Child Team!
