Hop on and take a ride with us as we cruise the Petersen Automotive Museum in Los Angeles, California with a car aficionado and this week's Wednesday's Child story. Meet Brooklyn, a young boy born in 1999 with a thing for cars.

If you drive down the freeway with Brooklyn you'll discover he can name almost every car on the road. With an eye for identifying cars, he'd definitely make a great Highway Patrol Officer. He's not certain if being a cop is something he wants to do or even working on cars but this adventurous kid has a free spirit and is always open to new activities and experiencing new things.

From luxury cars to race cars, this kid can name them all. But what about the classics? To learn about them, Brooklyn donned on period clothing for a trip to yesteryear and a pretend drive down historic Route 66.

Brooklyn had great fun playing in a Model-T and it's clear he definitely gets his kicks from cars of all types. However, there is little doubt that this little guy definitely loves the fast ones.

For a child in foster care, it seems like a constant race to find permanency. Time is precious and our hope for Brooklyn is a loving family of his own waiting for him at the finish line. If you can see yourself guiding Brooklyn along life's road, give us a honk, or... a call.
