This week's Wednesday's Child story features a 15 year old kid with a passion for sports and a strong desire to be a member of a permanent family. Our starting line up - The Freddie Mac Foundation's CEO, Ralph Boyd and Torii Hunter of the Los Angeles Angels of Anaheim to help Wayne find a family to call his own.

Wednesday's Child, sponsored by the Freddie Mac Foundation and Torii Hunter, a star athlete who gives of his own time and resources for mentor inner city kids team up to give Wayne an experience of a life time. Wayne didn't know who he would meet or that he would sit right behind the Angels' dugout for the game. On this shoot, Wayne was touched by Angels.

Wayne was born in 1994. In addition to Torii Hunter, Wayne got to meet the starting line up of the Angels and got autographs from stars such as Guerrero, Lackey and Anderson among others. Playing catch and getting a batter lesson was among the things Wayne got to do. Wayne loves all kinds of sports, when he's not in school or doing homework, what does he turn on to watch? What ever season it is, it'll be basketball, baseball and football. Wayne even showed us some of his football moves on the field.

Of all the activities that day, what Wayne loved most was chatting with the players which exemplify what a personable young man this kid is. Wayne is a caring and compassionate boy who always takes the time to ask how others are doing. Among other interests? Wayne also likes music and of course video games but mostly, socializing with whomever he's with sparks smiles, laughter and a lot of conversation.

A grand slam for the Wednesday's Child team is to find this deserving teen a permanent home to call his own. If you have a heart for older kids, please give us a call.
